Bonn Votes $330 Million for E. Berlin

East Germany Relaxes Travel, Paving Way for Western Visit by Honecker

By William Drozdiak

Washington Post Service BONN — The West German government approved Wednesday a credit of 950 million Deutsche marks (about $330 million) for East Germany. At the same time, East German officials announced a relaxation of travel restrictions beween the two states.

The cabinet decision came after weeks of sensitive negotiations be-tween Boun and East Berlin. It was welcomed by all major political parties in West Germany as a reaffirmation of the blossoming détente between the two countries despite East-West tensions.

Philip Jenninger, the West German chancellery adviser who conducted the talks with East German officials, said that agreement on the loan and the travel concessions meant that "we also now assume that East German head of state Erich Honecker will visit West the steadily improving dialogue and human contacts between the two nations arguably amounts to his greatest foreign policy success. Moreover, good relations with East Germany would seem to re-fute opposition claims that his de-

Pensioners visiting East Germany will now be required to exchange 15 Deutsche marks per day instead of the previous 25 Deutsche marks, an amount that bad inhibited frequent visits by poor elderly people to friends and relatives in East Germany.

"These measures are proof that efforts to improve our ties continue despite strains in East-West rela-

But he admitted that the Bonn government sought even greater concessions on travel in the belief that fewer East Germans would attempt to emigrate if they were per-mitted the opportunity to travel more freely to the West.

Reagan Starts Campaign With Truman-Like Blast

By David S. Broder Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan did a pretty fair imitation Tuesday night of Harry S. Truman as he opened his reelection drive on national television with a blistering counterattack on the "demagoguery" he said had the Democrats' convention hall. While saying that he preferred to campaign "on our program" and not "against our opponents," Mr. Reagan served notice that, if the Democrats pulled verbal rough stuff on him, he was ready to retaliate in kind.

From his opening salvo against the Democratic-controlled House, which he said was blocking popular legislation that was "long overdue," to his closing claim to being a ed of illegal oil trading drug train pioneer in promoting the interests of women, Mr. Reagan was as feisty and assertive a candidate as any manager could nope to see.

While enjoying the free air time that networks give a presidential news conference, Mr. Reagan signaled several themes of his campaign strategy.

He was palpably eager to label his Democratic challenger, Walter F. Mondale, as a high-tax, bigspending liberal, who would walk away from the struggle with communism in the hemisphere even if it left the victims to "bleed to death."

He was equally eager to avoid personal confrontation with the Democrats' vice presidential nominee, Representative Geraldine A. Ferraro of New York, brushing off a question about her participation in campaign debates and protesting that he had never meant to suggest that there was "tokenism" in her

Mr. Reagan took Mr. Mondaie's statement that a tax increase is inevitable next year and tried to turn it against the challenger. He denied the Democrats' statement that he had "a secret plan" for such an increase, but he later conceded that income since Mr. Reagan came to office: and a General Accounting Office report that 493,000 families were moved off welfare due to Reagan administration initiatives.

But Mr. Reagan said spending had soured for programs in which the means of potential recipients could be tested, and he promised to keep intact a "safety net" of programs to protect the truly needy. He stole one of the Democrats' favorite issues by promising Social Security recipients that he would ask Congress to approve their costof-living increase.

He made two other pitches to the middle-income families at whom Mr. Mondale had aimed his convention rhetoric, telling them that he wanted the House to increase individual retirement accounts for nonworking spouses and to provide tax credits for parents of private and parochial school students.

Throwing Mr. Mondale's slogan back in his face, Mr. Reagan said the test of his opponent's proclaimed "new realism" was whethmove on such popular issues as crime control, prayer in school and a balanced-budget constitutional amendment

That challenge recalled Truman's 1948 ultimatum to the Republican 80th Congress; he characterized it as a "do-nothing" congress for turning back many of his legislative programs, setting the stage for his "Give 'em hell, Harry' comeback campaign.

Repeatedly in the half hour, Mr. Reagan described Mr. Mondale and the Democrats as hypocrites who professed to care for the middle class while opposing tax cuts that help them, all the time taking (Continued on Page 2, Col. 5)

WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan has said that he will not seek a tax increase next year if re-elected, but he has qualified this by suggesting that he might propose higher taxes if he cannot reduce the deficit sufficiently through cuts in spending. Responding to the Democratic Mondale, who last week challenged the president to reveal his "secret plan" for a tax increase. Mr. Reagan said Tuesday night at a news

"I have no plans for a tax in-crease. I believe it would be counterproductive with regard to the present recovery or expansion. Indeed, I believe that the tax cut that we had is largely responsible for the recovery that we're having."

Mr. Reagan added, in response to a question, that he could forsee a tax increase only if government spending still exceeded income after cuts had been made. But he said "I think we're a long way from that

Mr. Mondale, on a fishing vacation in northern Minnesota, said in a statement that he had "been hearing fish stories all week but tonight Mr. Reagan told a big one." He said Mr. Reagan clearly was plan-ning "unfair budget cuts and a tax increase that will sock the middle

Mr. Reagan said Tuesday that, instead of raising taxes, Congress should move quickly to pass a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced budget. He called for quick action on several bills that have bogged down in Congress, including legislation to give lax credits to low- and middle-income parents who send their children to private schools, to provide tax incentives to draw businesses into central cities, to give religious groups access to meeting rooms in public schools and to toughen federal criminal law. "It's time to test the 'new real-ISIN AND SEC II INC DEMOCIATIC I ership will move from words to action," Mr. Reagan said.

The phrase "new realism" was a key one in Mr. Mondale's acceptance speech at the Democratic convention; he said he would raise taxes if elected and contended that Mr. Reagan would have to do the same because of federal budget deficits of about $175 billion.

Mr. Reagan's attack on the Democrats for delaying legislation he favors was repeated in sharper language in a nationally televised commercial aired Tuesday night. In it, Mr. Reagan calls upon Mr. Mondale and the House speaker, Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., Democrat of Massachusetts, to translate "talk into action." He also said the bills

he favored "are being held hos-tage" by the Democrats.

Mr. O'Neill replied with an attack of his own in which he de-scribed the Republican statements as "a cynical attempt at a snow job on the American people. in his news conference Tuesday, Mr. Reagan resisted efforts to pin him down on possible areas for spending cuts, except to say that he would rely on the report of the Grace commission, a presidentially appointed group that made hun-dreds of recommendations for reducing inefficiency in government. But Mr. Reagan did say that Medicare, veterans' benefits and farm price supports would be among the programs that would be studied for possible savings.

Mr. Reagan jumped into the political campaign with critical re-marks about Mr. Mondale and conciliatory ones about his running mate, Representative Geraldine A.

Ferraro of New York. Mr. Reagan called the Demo-crats' selection of Ms. Ferraro "long overdue." He backed away from a comment by Edward J. Rollins, the campaign director of the Reagan-Bush 84 re-election committee, that Ms. Ferraro could "become the biggest bust politically in

Asked about the remark, Mr. Reagan said, "I wouldn't touch that question with a 10-foot pole." The president took issue with a pledge Mr. Mondale made in his acceptance speech to halt U.S. backing of Nicaraguan rebels within 100 days of taking office. As he has in the past, Mr. Reagan depicted the Sandinist government of Nicaragua as a Marxist threat to the hemisphere and said

Democrats appeared to be "opposing everything that we've tried to do" in Central America. He said he feared that the Democrats' "niggardly treatment of El Salvador" was tantamount to letting it "slowly bleed to death." Mr. Reagan also pointed proudly to the U.S. invasion of Grenada in October that toppled a Marxist

"Well, they don't have one in Grenada anymore," Mr. Reagan said. "It is the responsibility of this government to assist the people of Nicaragua in seeing that they don't have one in Nicaragua."

While the talk of a unity govern-ment spread, Labor and Likud each continued efforts to form a government coalition on its own. Both parties looked beyond traditional allies for enough backing to gain the necessary 61 seats in the 120-member Knesser.

Labor had a majority over Likud in Monday's elections, but Mr. Shamir seemed better poised to form a coalition since he is ideologically closer to most of the religious parties that have the crucial votes in parliament

WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan has decided to ease the ban on Soviet fishing in U.S. waters, imposed after the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan in 1979, a State Department official said Wednesday.

BRUSSELS — The North Atlantic Treaty Organization officials discussed Poland's amnesty Wednesday, but they delayed a decision on lifting Western economic Polish diplomats said they hoped their application before the International Monetary Fund would be reviewed in September with a view to a favorable decision by the end of the year.

Unlikely Allies Emerge As U.S., Soviet Support Iraqis in Gulf Conflict

By John Kifner New York Times Service

BAGHDAD — The fortunes of the Gulf war have clearly placed the United States and the Soviet Union in a de facto alliance in support of Iraq, according to diplo-

The siding of the two nations with Baghdad is just one of the curious international alignments to have grown out of the nearly fouryear war. The Saudi Arabian monarchy is paying the bill for Communist-made arms, and France is supplying missiles that Iraq is using against oil tankers of industrialized

The most common thread running through the alliance building fundamentalist Islamic regime Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini of

But according to diplomats in Baghdad, the countries supporting Iraq are also hoping to secure a hold in what they see as a relatively stable, oil-producing nation that could play a major role in the area when the war comes to an end.

In addition, some countries have been drawn into supporting Iraq by financial interests and multibilliondollar development projects for which payment has been put off until after the war, thus giving them : a stake in an Iraqi victory.

The Soviet Union had been cool toward Iraq since President Saddam Hussein purged and executed Communist sympathizers and banned the Communist Party after taking power in 1978. But now Moscow has resumed large-scale arms shipments.

Moscow's move is believed to be primarily linked to Tehran's ban-ning of the Tudeh Party, Iran's Communist party, and the arrest of many of its members, beginning in February 1983, as well as the expulsion of 18 Eastern bloc diplomats three months later.

The Iranian government had vowed that it would be "neither East nor West," and Ayatollah Khomeini once said of the United States and the Soviet Union: "There is no difference between America and Russia. Each is worse than the other." With the end of U.S. influence in Iran in 1979, when the Islamic revolution overthrew the shah, Mohammed Reza Pahlavi, the Soviet Union had hoped to extend its influence over its neighbor. By late Communists. .... making up the rest.

Western military sources in Baghdad say that in the last few months, there has been a largescale resupply of Soviet-built arms. including tanks, artillery and missiles. This has given Iraq's forces an overwhelming predominance of Diplomats stress, however, that the Soviet supplies do not include "anything that could change the strategic balance of the region."

That apparently means that Iraq has received no long-range missiles that could reach Israel.

In addition, the Soviet Union is believed to be putting pressure on its allies, primarily North Korea, to cut back on arms sales to Iran. A major thrust of the U.S. support of Iraq, diplomats said, has been a State Department effort headed by Richard M. Fairbanks 3d, a special negotiator for the Middle East, to persuade Western countries not to sell arms to Iran. According to both Western and Arab sources, these countries include South Korea, Italy, Spain and Portneal.

Another key element in the growing U.S. involvement in Iraq is the planned construction of a $1billion oil pipeline from Iraq's Kirkuk refinery through Jordan to the Gulf of Aqaba. The project, now under negotiation, would include a $570-million contract for the Bechtel Corp.

From the American point of view, the pipeline, along with a second planned line through Saudi Arabia, would help tie Iraq to what are regarded as moderate pro-Western countries in the region.

The Iraqi perspective is that having an American equity in the project would guarantee its protection from Israel. Also, former officers of the Bechtel Corp. are prominent in the Reagan administration.

Iraq is now pumping about 700 million barrels of oil a day through its Turkish pipeline. A second pipeline through Syria, which supports Iran, was shut off by Damascus. Leaders of Saudi Arabia and other Gulf countries, fearful that a wave of Islamic fundamentalism will topple them from power, are also paying Iraq billions of dollars in oil money to light the war. Most New York Times and Congressioof these funds are used for arms nal Quarterly reported separately

Israelis Deserve Better

The disheartening news from Israel's politi-cal garden is that the weeds are crowding out the flowers. The center is failing against the fringes. Democracy flourishes, but government flounders. Only a third of the electorate wants to keep the regime of recent years, yet only a third prefers the Labor establishment of the past. Still another third has elected a dozen sectarian parties or individuals who are now in position to impose their minority views on both hungry parties shopping for a frail majority in the Knesset. Whatever cabinet is thus pasted together is bound to fall apart before long. And it cannot possibly pursue coherent economic or strategic policies.

Israel thus finds itself without a consensus, and without a prospect of consensus, about how to tame a runaway inflation, disengage from a still costly occupation in Lebanon or deal with an unabsorbable population of more than a million Palestinian Arabs.

After three decades of mostly external trauma. Israel's main challenge now is internal. and systemic. Its politics not only respects dissent but rewards dissenters with disproportionate influence. The most extreme of them are poles apart, but instead of strengthening the moderate middle, this division only pulls them further apart. Hostile Arab and Communist factions on one side and Jewish terrorists like Meir Kahane on the other now have to be reckoned with in the tawdry maneuvering. Already-serious social strains between European and Middle Eastern Jews will be further aggravated by the fundamentalist demands of intolerant religious factions.

Meanwhile the casualties in Lebanon will continue to mount. And a 400-percent inflation threatens economic ruin, despite enormous aid from the United States.

Valiant, gifted Israel deserves better. Yet its well-wishers around the world cannot help until it musters the strength to reorganize. Israelis are not nearly as fragmented as their politicians, but they cannot coalesce in a political system that so hugely rewards the disgruntled and the idiosyncratic. The strongest government now would be a coalition of the two major parties, incompatible though their main policies are. Let such a coalition devote itself to a single objective; a redesign of the voting system and a new, clarifying election. Where none can govern, none can prosper.

-THE NEW YORK TIMES

All right, it was foolish from the start to expect Israeli voters to please the United States by making their election a referendum condemning the ruling Likud's West Bank policy. "The West Bank is only an issue to those ardently pro-settlement and those bitterly opposed," an Israeli wrote recently. "To the bulk of the population, it is simply another element in the incheate desire for 'security.'

There is no denying, however, that from the point of view of American self-interest, the Israeli elections were a deep disappointment. Labor, with its promise of a new West Bank agenda, had the Lebanon war, 400-percent inflation and Menachem Begin's political demise going for it. Still. Likud fared well. Both parties lost seats, and Likud lost more; but Likud lost to small parties in its nationalistreligious camp, parties that will help it govern, while Labor lost mainly to parties outside its camp. It will take a few days to finish the counting and a few weeks or more to construct another government coalition. To the extent that it is not more hard-line, it will likely be weaker than the one in power now.

A friendly democratic country's vote must be respected, but there should be no hesitation to assess its meaning. Most Americans who care for Israel, and many who don't, believe Likud's annexationist policy on the West Bank is driving Israel to the point where, to stay Jewish, it will become increasingly anti-democratic. The Likud course has constricted efforts to find common U.S.-Israeli strategic ground, and compromised the American claim to run an independent Middle East policy.

For a while — perhaps, given the record, a long while — the Israeli government will be able to use Palestinian intransigence and disarray and Jordanian caution as cover for its refusal to try drawing Arabs into a respectable Camp David-type negotiation. There is much truth - and further cover - in the arguments that the Arab world is preoccupied by security threats other than Israel and that the market is constantly devaluing the Arabs' oil card.

There remains the continuing and troubling spectacle of America being a party to Israel's denial of political rights to the Palestinians. One does not have to exaggerate the disaster that may befall U.S. interests in order to oppose the policy that Likud has been diligently pursuing for the last seven years. The policy is wrong. U.S. acquiescence is wrong. The policy cannot be justified - or ignored.

Steel and Copper Quotas?

Within the next few weeks President Reagan will have to make a decision on import quotas to protect America's steel and copper industries. The U.S. International Trade Commission, in a bad decision, has recommended a mixture of tariffs and quotas for steel imports. In another bad decision, the commission split inconclusively between recommendations for tariffs and for quotas on imported copper. The administration needs to consider carefully just what it is trying to do for whom.

Let us accept the argument that there is an essential national interest in maintaining the capacity to produce a substantial volume of steel in the United States. But import quotas, which simply set a number of tons to be imported each month, are the least efficient

What is better? Think for a moment about price supports. The industry and labor detest the idea because it makes the price of protection visible, just as quotas conceal it. Under a price support system the government would set a production level to be supported and then let the companies bid for the right to produce shares of that production. Unlike quotas, it would guarantee them a viable price while keeping up pressure to hold down production costs. Ouotas are an invitation to let production costs soar. That is why they are popular.

customers - all the companies that make cars, aircraft, machinery and electrical equipment - get access to steel and copper at the same world prices as their competitors in Japan, Brazil and elsewhere. Why should those companies have to suffer a competitive disadvantage to bail out high-priced metals producers? Do price supports sound too much like the deadening hand of government intervention? After half a century of price supports, American agriculture is one of the most fiercely competitive industries in the country, as well as one of the most advanced technologically, and it operates at prices that very few other countries can match. Import quotas, by contrast, are old-age pensions for tired industries

If Mr. Reagan were to recommend price supports, he could expect to be greeted with the abuse that predictably greets any unfamiliar idea in the highly conventional field of trade regulation. To avoid the abuse, he could resort to tariffs, and steel and copper prices would move up shortly to take advantage of them. If he really wanted to please the steel and copper industries, he would make heavy use of import quotas. The results would soon be visible in the inflation rate.

Reacting to the Polish Amnesty

Some see (the Polish amnesty) wholly as a gesture to the West, particularly to the Reagan administration, which had made the release of political prisoners a condition for easing economic sinctions. There is no doubt that Poland needs to revive its economic links with the West to speed its economic recovery. But if that had been the decisive consideration, the amnests would have come a long time ago.

The fact is that the Polish government now feels sufficiently assured of its position vis-avis the people generally and the dissidents in particular. Not only is Solidarity now almost totally defunct as an organization, the very concept of Solidarity-style dissidence has lost its appeal for the common people, as was evidenced by the large turnout in the recent civic elections despite a boycott call by Lech Walesa and other Solidarity leaders.

- The Indian Express (New Delhi).

The American anguish on the Polish question remains great, not only because many Americans have kin in Poland, but because U.S. banks are so heavily exposed to questionable Polish debt. The Jaruzelski regime, having met part of the American demands with the amnesty, is entitled to at least a partial lifting of the economic sanctions.

Specific plans have been suggested, in particular by Felix Rohatyn and Peter Kenen to stretch out short-term loans to something like 15-to-30-year maturities at around 6 percent interest. Anthony Solomon, president of the New York Federal Reserve Bank, proposes a "cap" on interest rates that would defer interest above a certain level for payment later on.

As the conventional wisdom suggests, these ideas — and Mr. Kissinger's -may not be salable to the U.S. Congress and other parliaments. If so, it is worthwhile trying to find some strategy that is.

For, as Colin I. Bradford pointed out in a recent study for the Overseas Development Council, there is no global economic strategy or clearly discernible leadership right now. In the void or stalemate that exists, the IMF approach takes over by default. The fear in underdeveloped parts of the world is that growth is being sacrificed to control of inflation. If the consequences of this are repressive, as Latin American leaders and many in Europe fear, it could spell a serious setback for democratic forces that are fighting for survival or expansion in a number of countries.

Ronald Reagan won the presidency in 1980 with only 27.9 percent of potential voters, whereas Wendell Wilkie in 1940 and Adlai Stevenson in 1952 both got a larger percentage of the potential voters and still lost.

The Democrats may lose this election, but they don't think they will lose to Ronald Reagan if he draws less than 30 percent of the eligible voters. This is why they are paying so much attention to organiration and registration, to the for-gotten and forgetful dropouts and to women and minorities.

"In a very basic way," former Governor Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California observed here the other day, "Geraldine Ferraro defines the difference between Mondale and Reagan. One embraces diversity and engages the future. This emerging change has yet to be perceived, much less exploited, by israelis who still look at Europe with a mixture of historical emotions memories of the Holocaust, political frustration vis-à-vis policy perceived as hostile (typified by the Venice dec-laration of 1980), a disposition to feel that ultimately Europe may no longer matter and that the only West that

Europe's Lost Jews Recently there have been a number of articles in your pages on the new technological revolution and the fear that Europe may be rapidly falling behind or unable to compete with new developments in the United States and Japan. One factor has not been discussed: the rebound effect of the expulsion and extermination of Jews from Europe, beginning with the Russian persecutions in the 19th century and ending with the immediate postwar period. Many of the leading scientists and technologists in the electronic revolution in the United States are directly or indirectly part of this vast refugee group.

Conversely, the destruction of the major part of the Jewish community in Europe removed not only these people, but the potential offspring who would now be playing a major role in European science and technologs - with presumably, good links to the American intellectual community. Lost, too, is the vast teaching role in pure and applied science that the offspring of the Holocaust generation would have supplied.

The effect brings to mind the pre-

Rethinking IQ Tests and Their Value

By Daniel Goleman

New York Times Service

New York — Mention IQ

The gists, intelligence quotients are elu-industry's hesitance to try new apsive items that may or may not proaches results largely from their measure a thing called intelligence. which may or may not predict how well people will do in life.

Peter Medawar, the Nobel Prizewinning biologist, has long argued that attaching a single number to IQ creates the dangerous illusion that we know what intelligence is and can measure it. If he is right, the illusion engulfs many thousands of people. IQ tests and their cousins, achievement tests (which tal. Dr. Jensen would replace the assess particular skills rather than overail intelligence), are ubiquitous; the armed forces, schools, employers, indeed most organizations that sort people according to mental abilities use them.

Schools are the largest customers, and it is there, critics say, that the illusion can become a nightmare. Test scores often determine the courses students take, the level of work assigned and the careers for which they are prepared.

Many who use the tests, however, defend them on the ground that society needs some way to match people to suitable positions.
"You've got to make some kind of assessment to know what a kid can and cannot do," said Walter Pryzwansky, a psychologist at the University of North Carolina School of Education, "so you can plan according to his strengths and weakmore psychologists who object to gence as a single entity. Instead, traditional IQ measures are proposing what they believe to be bet-

One of the more radical of these new approaches comes from the psychologist Arthur Jensen at the University of California, Berkeley, who created an uproar several years ago by proposing that differences in IQ among races are mostly hereditary rather than environmenpaper and pencil test with an electronic measure of reaction time, or the speed with which people make simple decisions, such as whether the words "cat" and "bird" mean the same thing. Reaction time, Dr. Jensen argues, reveals basic cognitive abilities that are at the core of Many experts disagree. They warn that Dr. Jensen may be measuring a factor, such as attention span, that is only tangentially related to intelligence. Robert Sternberg, a psychologist at Yale, notes in the Phi Delta Kappan, a journal for educators, that "the large ma-jority of consequential tasks that confront us do not require that problems be solved or decisions made in the small number of seconds typically allotted for the solu-tion of IQ test problems."

He then hopes to streamline the procedure to "come up with a prowould explain the child's strengths and suggest how his weaknesses could be strengthened." Dr. Gardner says his evaluation will provide more useful informato materials used in school.

The importance of that environment was underscored by the recent startling finding that Americans' IQ scores have been rising for the past half century. According to data published in the Psychological Bulletin by James Flynn from the University of Dunedin in New Zealand, the gain is impressive: almost 15 IQ points. Thus, someone who scores 100 today — 100 being average and 140 being exceptionally high — would have scored 115 on the 1932 version of the test. According to Dr. Flynn, heredity cannot account for such a large gain in a generation or two, but environmental changes can.

John Ogbu, a Nigerian anthropologist at Berkeley, agrees. In-deed, he says the difference in average IQ scores between black and white Americans is almost identical

Is Man Losing Battle With Mosquito?

By William J. Broad

New York Times Service

N EW YORK — Although new

studies, techniques and chemicals offer some hope for the future, many scientists say man is losing ground in his age-old battle with the mosquito.

The war has ramifications far graver than any discomfort from tching. Scientists point to the following developments, which include a range of health problems:

• The biological control of mosquitoes through natural agents has proved more expensive and less efective than once was hoped. • Old-fashioned methods of control, such as draining swamps and other breeding grounds, are sometimes thwarted by environmental concerns. Mosquitoes are becoming resistant to new insecticides almost as fast as chemists can make them. • Some diseases carried by mosquitoes are rapidly on the rise around the world, including malaria and dengue fever. Drugs to treat and prevent ma-laria, such as chloroquine, are los-

The war against the mosquito is going backward," said Dr. George B. Craig Jr., director of the Vector world's foremost experts on mos-

That does not mean man is retreating - far from it. Research is progressing on new kinds of insecticides and repellents. Moreover, scientists are learning a great deal about the mosquito: its breeding habits, behavior and genetics and the mysteries of its sensory systems, all of which hold the promise of more effective weapons. Yet the search for the perfect repellent has been frustrating. No real progress has been made in the past quarter century, and researchers say the goal may still be billions of bites away. In the meantime, mosquitoes are coming resistant to almost every kind of insecticide. The problem has to do with evolution, scientists explain. In every large population of mosquitoes a few will naturally ing their effectiveness.

• Reported cases of equine enand will survive and genetically be resistant to a new insecticide pass along that resistance to their offspring. Soon, the area will be populated with mosquitoes that cannot be killed by the insecticide.

"What's disturbing," said Mi-chael J. Dover, a researcher in the Global Pesticide Use Project of the World Resources Institute based in Washington, "is that they're devel-oping multiple resistances. It's LIVERMORE, California (UPI) — The world's most powerful laser, capable of delivering up to 120 trillion watts of energy, has started operations at Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory.

The laser can be used to "increase the understanding of weapons physics," leading to "more efficient nuclear weapons," said officials at the laboratory, one of the United States largest research facilities for designing nuclear weapons.

The laser's beams, each 500 feet (150 meters) long, are directed at targets barely visible to the human eye. In tests earlier this month, eight of the 10 laser beams were fired, delivering 57 trillion watts of infrared laser light in a single pulse. That was twice as much laser light as produced by the world's second most powerful laser, in Osaka, Japan, scientists said.

Doctors Warn Against Tanning Suit

BOSTON (UPI) — A new type of bathing suit that allows ultraviolet sunlight to tan the wearer's body may increase the wearer's risk of skin cancer, a group of New York doctors report.

The popular suit, called an "nnsuit," is made with a special cotton weave that lets tanning rays through without being transparent. Dr. warrell S. Rigel and colleagues at New York University Medical Center, warn that the suits are not as protective as the manufacturer contends. The maker says it has a sun-tanning index of six, which means that someone wearing the suit must stay in the sun six hours to get the same someone wearing the suit must stay in the sun six hours to get the same

When Market Plays Politics, For Bank Defense Can Be Best Offense Is Queried

ormally, the stock market loves to play politics. Since

Alert on Petus Is Stul the turn of the century, Wall Street has risen 20 out of 21 times from its May-June low to a fourth-quarter high during presidential election years. The median gain on the Dow Jones industrial average has been 12.4 percent—exactly the figure in 1980. For the past 10 election years, the median gain has been 10.9 percent.

"Simply stated," said Thomas B. Stiles, research director at E.F. Hutton, "it's the phenomenon of a president gunning the election-year economy to get himself, or his heir apparent,

But 1984 has become the year when good news about the economy's growth is bad news, certainly to the stock market and probably to Ron-ald Reagan, too. Many analysts now fear that for the only time this century other than in 1920, when it was off 1.9 percent, the Dow's strong tendency to rise in an election year just won't happen in 1984.

However, one area in which politics will continue to affect stock prices is the defense group. The impact so far this year, with the Democrats and many Republicans in Congress taking potshots at Pentagon outlays in an effort to balance the federal budget, has been devastating to the stocks. Many defense issues have fallen by half since the first of the year.

Yet, as Jeffrey Applegate, E.F. Hutton's political economist based in Washington, notes: "A strong political consensus exists for rising defense spending."

While politicians talk boldly of "cuts" in the roughly $300-billion defense budget, he points out that the debate is really only about whether to slow the rate of increase.

It is estimated that if Ronald Reagan is re-elected, defense spending will rise a hefty 10 percent annually; if Walter F. Mondale were to win, expenditures would increase by at least half that amount. Moreover, Congress, in each of the last four years, has appropriated more for defense than the administration nd while the political controversy swirls around huge pro-grams like the MX missile, the $40-billion military electronics --- or high-tech --- area of defense spending promises to remain at full throttle, even under Mr. Mondale.

Outlays for that sector rose 20 percent yearly while Jimmy Carter was president, noted Peter Aseritis, who follows defense electronics for Hutton. "However, investors perceive great risk if Mondale wins," he said. "The stocks have become cheap." Over the past five years, the group has emoyed a price/earn-

Mr. Aseritis is dubious, however, about how well the stocks will do as the election nears and, if as usually happens, the underdog Mr. Mondale closes the gap. "But if Ronald Reagan continues to run strongly ahead, investors will begin to look at the group's solid fundamentals: a 20-to-25-percent earnings growth rate with strong sales and backlogs."

Agency Is Asked To Rule on Plan

By Kenneth B. Noble New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — The Treasory Department has confirmed that it questioned the legality of a rescue plan by federal agencies for Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust Co. and asked the Justice Department for a ruling.

In response, the Justice Department was unofficially reported as saying that the federal banking laws neither prohibited nor specifically authorized some of the plan's

A Treasury official cited concern that the rescue plan could be at-tacked as giving Continental's bondholders more protection than was authorized by Congress. Such a reading could be a basis for contending that the government was providing the bank with a bail-

Meanwhile, the financial markets reacted positively Tuesday to reports that the $4.5-billion rescue plan, tantamount to nationalization of Continental, has been agreed in outline. Banking sources said Monday that the plan includes the FDIC buying $3 billion in bad loens for $2 billion and the government purchase of $1 billion of newissued Continental securities.

The company's preferred stock rose from a record low of $12 a share on Monday to $22 Tuesday. Common stock rose to $4.375 a share from $3.875 Monday.

As Patents Elapse, U.S. Drug Industry Faces Big Competition From Generics

By Pamela G. Hollie

NEW YORK - Many consumers in the United States will benefit from lower-priced prescriptions in the next few years as the pharmaceutical industry undergoes a fundamental change. Some of the industry's most profitable drugs will lose their patent protection, opening the way to competition from cheaper generic copies.

American Home Products Corp.'s heart drug Inderal, which had sales of $335 million last year, will lose its patent protection in September. Inderal's ge-neric name is propranolol hydrochloride. And Valium, the tranquilizer sold by Hoffmann-La next February. Valium — generically, diazepsm — had 1983 sales of $225 million.

Roche Inc., will become eligible for generic approval

"When Librium, Hoffmann-LaRoche's forerunner to Valium, came off patent, prices dropped from $15 to $1," said William Haddad, president of the Generic Pharmaceutical Industry Association.

"The issue of generic substitution will have far-reaching financial implications on both the generic drug industry and the pioneer pharmaceutical indus-try," said Hemant K. Shah, an analyst for Mabon, Nugent & Co. in New York. As 125 eligible drugs receive approval for generic sale, compenition in the $15.7-billion prescription-drug industry will grow, he noted. "I am predicting a fundamental restructuring of the pharmaceutical industry," said Mr. Shah. In recent weeks, stock prices of some drug companies have declined amid generic competition. Other factors also affect drug stocks, analysts note.

Meanwhile, the stock prices of such generic drug

When a drug patent expires, a company that wants to make a generic copy must get approval from the Food and Drug Administration.

Prices of generic drugs are far below those of the original drugs because generic drugs are not advertised and because — unlike the company that developed the original drug — the generic copiers do not need to recoup the millions of dollars that were spent

Drugstore chains, union health plans and consumer organizations all encourage the use of generic drugs instead of the more expensive brand-name drugs. "We are certainly using more and more generic drugs," said Bruce Rifcan, manager of Cordette Drug in

The outlook for generics brightened in June when Representative Henry Waxman, a California Demo-crat, and Senator Orrin G. Hatch, a Utah Republican, negotiated a compromise on a proposed bill that would speed the approval process for generic drugs and would offer pioneer drug companies a chance at extension of their 17-year patent for drugs.

The Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association says the lengthy approval process makes drug companies price their drugs high to recover the $35 million it typically costs to develop a new drug. "It has been estimated that consumers stand to save

$1 billion over the next 12 years should this legislation be enacted," said Jacob Clayman, president of the National Council of Senior Citizens.

Compared with brand drugs, generic drugs have small sales — about $3.1 billion, or less than 20 (Continued on Page 9, Col. 5)

Volcker Warns Of Tightening By Fed in 1985

WASHINGTON — The Federal

Reserve Board intends to hold steady its grip on the U.S. money supply this year but tentatively plans to tighten it slightly in 1985. the agency's chairman, Paul A. Volcker, said Wednesday.

Mr. Volcker, giving his midyear report on monetary policy to the Senate Banking Committee, noted that inflation was staying low despite the economy's rapid expan-sion this year, but he reiterated his concern about the impact of the enormous federal budget deficit.

"The hard fact is ... the deficit remains huge," Mr. Volcker said. Little or no further decline now seems probable for 1985 and beyond, even if the economy maintains its healthy growth, he said.

The Fed chief said the deficit, expected to reach $170 billion to $175 billion this fiscal year, would normally shrink as the economy expands in a business cycle. But that is not happening this time,"

983, Treasury must compete strongly with accelerated demands for consumer and business credit and a continued high level of mortgage borrowing." He said that high interest rates are a symptom of the "excessive demands on our savings as well as ingering, and related, concerns about inflation."

But he said that there are no signs that the economy has been starved for money and credit.

As a result, Mr. Volcker added, the central bank would make no changes in its targets for growth in the money supply this year. The Fed will try to keep growth in the narrowest measure of the money supply in a range of 4 to 8 percent. That measure, called M-1, consists of cash and checking accounts. The target for M-2, a broader measure that includes M-1, savings accounts and most money market mutual funds, is 6 percent to 9 framework of greater stability, or a

For 1985, he said, the policymakers decided tentatively to reduce the growth ranges slightly for two of the three money-supply measures. The guideline for the third was left as it is now. The preliminary goal for M-1 is growth of 4 percent to 7 percent, for M-2, growth of 6 percent, to 8.5 percent, and for M-2 growth of 6 percent, or percent to 8.5 percent.

Dollar Retreats Again in Europe

The Associated Press LONDON - The dollar fell for a second day from its high levels against all major currencies in European trading Wednesday after the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, Paul A. Volcker, predicted only moderate U.S. economic growth through 1985.

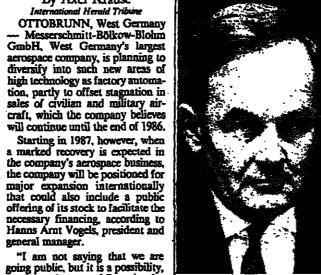

Foreign-exchange dealers said the decision not to tighten credit in July by the Fed's Open Market Committee, its policy making arm, helped soften Mr. Volcker's testimony to Congress that monetary growth may fall slightly in 1985. The pound closed at $1,335 to the dollar in London, from $1.3235 on Tuesday. In Paris, the dollar fell to 8.7613 French francs from 8.8200. In Frankfurt, dollar fell to 2.8585 Deutsche marks from 2.8704, but the dollar strengthened in Tokyo to 245.975 yen, from with 245.925. In midafternoon in New York, the pound was trading at Tuesday; the dollar fell to 2.8498 DM from 2.8738; it was at 8.7475 francs from 8.815, and it weakened against the yen to 245.225 from 246.185.

At 3 P.M.: Trading Is Active NEW YORK - The stock market, after seesawing much of the session, turned higher late Wednesday afternoon in fairly active trading as Wall Street bounced back from a 17-The Dow Jones industrial average, was ahead 13.47 to 1,100.04 an hour before the close. It skidded 10.05 to 1,086.57 on Tuesday, the lowest closing level since it finished at 1,080.40 on Feb. 22, 1983.

The Dow, which hit a previous 1984 low of 1,086.90 on June 15, fell 36.33 the previous five sessions and was down 200.07 since hitting its 1984 high of 1,286.64 on Jan. 6.

Advances led declines 750-712 among the 1,876 issues traded. Volume rose to 76.3 million shares, up from 59.2 million Tuesday.

Analysts said a large institutional investor launched a buying program during the afternoon that bolstered market spirits. They said there was considerable bargain hunting following the market's lengthy slide.

But many others big traders were selling to move their cash into the bond market. Brokers said Chrysler's pension fund recently sold $650 million worth of stock to lock into high yields in

Selectivity is a must to achieve a more than average gain in the coming booming market

We are bullish on the U.S. and world economy. Therefore we are optimistic about the growth in corporate earnings, this year's expectation around 20 46 on average.

We are equally confident that investors will ultimately recognize not only that we are on the brink of a non-inflationary period of healthy growth, but also that shareprices currently grossly understate their realistic values in terms of both future earnings prospects and bookvalues. When you, investor, get that message, we'll be well on the way to (at least) 2000 on the Dow. Which, in simplest of terms means most blue-chip equities will at least double in value and growth stocks will even rise much higher.

But selectivety is still very important. Our research selected both some blue-chips and Hightech growth stocks which hold out the most promise in the 1980's. Have our qualified staff take care of your tomorrow's profits. Call-in or write for your free copies of our Marketletter.

MATRIARCH: Queen Mary and the: House of Windsor

By Anne Edwards. 527 pp. $18.95. Morrow, 105 Madison Ave, New York, N.Y. 10016.

Reviewed by Judith Chettle

Q UEENS — unless monarchs in their own right — have to suffer the same crincisms and the same contrary expectations as the wives of U.S. presidents. They must be intelligent but not intellectual, warm and outgoing but discreet, chic but careful to spend only a modest amount on their dress. If the wives of presidents must contend with the near saintly attributes some of their predecessors acquire as memories fade, queens are haunted by the example of Marie Antoinette.

The British have been lucky in this century with the wives of their kings - Elizabeth the Queen Mother, Queen Alexandra and Queen Mary have all deservedly earned their subjects' affections, while at the same time strengthening the monarchy by their efforts and their example. Of the three, Queen Mary is recognized as having made the most substantial contribution; and Anne Edwards has given us a gossipy, somewhat breathless biography of this remarkable woman who loyally served six monarchs in her long lifetime.

A great-granddaughter of George III, and daughter of the Duke of Teck, Queen Mary was born a princess in 1867. Even in those days, it was not unknown for impoverished members of the aristocracy to look on a good marriage as — next to pawning the family jewels — the most reliable way to recoup the family fortunes. She and her family were part of the British royal family but her parents' improvidence and lack of fortune made them dependent on the family for loans and assistance. Her engagement to the eldest son of the Prince of Wales, the dull and sickly Prince Eddy, was regarded by her family as the stroke of luck they so desperately needed. Unfortunately, and to the family's horror, Prince Eddy and the dull the family's horror, Prince Eddy and the family and the family short as were the suddenly died. Formitously, within a year the princess was engaged to Eddy's younger brother George.

The princess was a serious young woman with artistic and intellectual interests that made her superior to her husband, whose two consuming hobbies were stamp collecting and shooting animals. The rest of his family and her own descendants were scarcely any different. They were all country squires at heart who, like the present queen, would live in the country surrounded by dogs and horses, if they had their own way. Queen Mary liked neither dogs nor horses, preferred travel abroad to holidays in the Highlands, and would rather read a book than follow the men out shooting each day.

She was modern enough to have these different aspirations and yet Victorian enough to put duty to the monarchy and to the country above all else. Before 1910 the monarchy had been a part-time job. But George V, as the British historian A. J. P. Taylor has written, "made constitutional monarchy a whole-time occupation. He saw, with startling perception, that the Crown had become essentially a symbol; and he showed how this symbol could be personified in a very ordinary man with very ordinary tastes." Together, with conscientiousness and grace, they carried out the duties and responsibilities that this new conception required, at the same time setting an example

MACKINAC ISLAND, Michigan (AP) — Heritage was declared winner of Section 1 of the 7th Chicago-Mackinac Island yacht race Tuesday when judges penalized the unofficial winner for a rules violation. The corrected time of Heritage, skippered by Don Wildman, was 31:37:26. Guided by Richard Rodseth, Vagary, with a corrected time of 30:59:05, was found not to have a required emergency tiller capable of being fitted to the rudder stock should the main tiller have broken. Once again the right wing lined up against the liberals in voicing moral indignation.

A conservative columnist said, "The pageant people had no choice but to force her to resign. Miss America is the nearest thing this country has to Princess Di. and by posing in the buff Vanessa tarnished this country's tiara."

"She was hoodwinked into posing for the pictures two years before she went for the title," a liberal columnist shouted. "I would be the last one to condone audity in any

Is Sun Setting on the British Bulldog?

By R. W. Apple Jr.

New York Times Service

PALDWICK, England — Is the homely English bulldog, that wartime symbol of British pluck, the cartoonist's favorite personification of the national character, in the process of disappearing?

Bow-legged, flat-faced, low-slung and burly, somehow simultaneously pugnacious and benign, the bulldog was identified with Winston Churchill just as Fala the scottie was identified with his ally, Franklin D. Roosevelt. But the undershot jaw and the pug nose of the breed are seldom seen these days in a country where dogs are omnipresent on city streets, on country lanes, in houses, in pubs.

The official figures kept by the Kennel Club show that German shepherds, Labrador retrievers and Yorkshire terriers are the most popular dogs in Britain; no fewer than 20,593 new-born skepherds were registered last year. Bulldogs, however thoroughly British they may be, were well down the list, with only 792

According to F. A. Hamilton, the editor of the weekly Dog World, the fact that German shepherds outnumber English bulldogs re-sults not from a decline in patriotism but from an increase in crime. "It's the changing times, I'm afraid," Hamilton said. "People want the shepherds as guard dogs."

Bulldogs were still among the top 20 Brit-ish breeds as recently as 1954, but then they dropped completely off the list, and for the past two decades there have been fewer than 1,000 registrations a year.

Originally bred to bait bulls — hence the name — the bulldog was known in Britain as early as 1500. It is a descendant of the mastiff, a Tibetan breed that is one of four types of dog thought to have existed in 3000 B.C. Although they were often tossed into the air, the dogs kept at it until they finally pinned the enraged bull by the nose. Great sums of money were bet on the outcome of the fights until the sport was finally outlawed in this country in 1835.

Little by little, bulldogs' legs have grown shorter and their bodies stouter, old prints show creatures that are positively elfin compared with the modern bruisers. But in the process, some critics say, they have become disease prone, vulnerable in particular to ail-ments that make breathing difficult. "Ridiculous, absolute nonsense," retorted

G. S. Wakefield, a no-nonsense woman who has been breeding bulldogs at her house in this Cambridgeshire village for 30 years. "None of my dogs is ever sick. They exercise three times a day, without leashes, just run-ning free, in all kinds of weather. Don't tell me they can't move or breathe!"

Wakefield, a regular winner at the big

All her champions are kept outdoors; in-deed, that is the prefix to their names. They are called Outdoors Boozer, Outdoors Basher, Outdoors Jubilant, Outdoors Duke, to suggest how hale and hearty a bunch they are. Wakefield, a widow, says that "my dogs are my life," but she is not above a little fun: She used to tease her husband occasionally by

But Rita Stratta, manager of the pet shop at Harrods, the big London department store. says the bulldog is a connoisseur's dog, "the kind of breed that only appeals to people who want to be a little bit different." She likes them herself and finds their temperament "enchanting," she said, but she conceded that she had relatively few requests for them from customers, whatever their nationality.
